

NEXT GRAND JURY MAY CONTINUE BOND PROBE

The Fulton County Grand Jury, which adjourns on Saturday, has rested its probe of the alleged fake bond scandal with the indictment of three men on a charge of forging bonds, but the next Grand Jury is expected to take up an exhaustive investigation of criminal bonds, a number of which are said to be forgeries and consequently worthless.

Three men who have been indicted by the present Jury are Emmett Blount, a lawyer, against whom a similar indictment was brought during the bond probe of a year ago; C. C. Tedder, who figured in the Frank Case; and Harry Latham. Blount is out on bond, Latham is in jail, and Tedder is alleged to be a fugitive.

The Grand Jury is said to have found a number of bonds which are alleged to be worthless, but will leave a further investigation, and the bringing of additional indictments to their successors.
